The owner of the seal Samouel Alousianos came from Bulgaria, was son of Alousianos and Dalassene, brother of Basileios and Ann, grandson of Bulgar Tsar Ivan Vladislav. He was married to M... Dalassene, daughter of Constantinus Dalassenus and had a son, Constantine, who became vestarches. Samouel, who died after 1068, became a byzantine high rank officer, strategos, proedros, vestarches and dux (commander) of Edessa, under the byzantine emperor Romanos IV Diogenes. His sister was the first wife of Romanus IV Diogenes. In 1069 AD, as commander of the five western tagmata, wintering in the Armenian themes, he was ordered to attack the Frankish rebel mercenary, commander Robert Crispin. The Byzantine forces were ambushed and defeated, but Samuel survived and rose to the rank of proedros. Bibliography: Jordanov, Corpus II 24; Seibt-Zarnitz 3.1.9. Mesopotamia (Greek: Μεσσοποταμία) was the name of a Byzantine theme (a military-civilian province) located in what is today eastern Turkey. It should not be confused with the region of Mesopotamia or with the older Roman and early Byzantine province of Mesopotamia. The Byzantine theme was located between the rivers Arsanias (modern Murat) and Çimisgezek. The theme was formed probably between 899 and 911, when Emperor Leo VI the Wise (r. 886–912) appointed the former strategos of the Charsianon, named Orestes, as its governor. Most of the province was formed out the Armenian principality of Takis, ruled by the chieftain Manuel. Manuel and his four sons were persuaded to cede their territory to the Byzantine Empire in exchange for titles and estates in other themes. Lead Seal of Loukas (Chrysoberges), Patriarch of Constantinople, 1157-1170. MHP-ΘΥ ('Mother of God') The Virgin Mary seated facing on a backless throne, nimbate and holding Infant Christ before her, placing her right hand on his shoulder and gently touching his feet with her left; Christ is raising his right hand in benediction and holds a scroll in his left hand. Rev. ΛΟΥΚΑC/ΕΛΕω ΘΥ ΑΡΧΙ/ΕΠΙΣΚΟΠΟC Κων/ΠΟΛΕωC ΝΕΑC ΡΟΜΗC ΚΑΙ ΟΙΚΥΜΕΝΙΚΟC /ΠΡΙΑΡΧΗ[C] ('Loukas, by the mercy of God, archbishop of Constantinople the New Rome and ecumenical patriarch') in seven lines; above, cross. Metcalf, Cyprus 481. Seibt & Zarnitz 5.1.3. A very interesting and highly important clerical seal. Luke Chrysoberges (Greek: ΛουκάC ΧρυσοβέργηC), – November 1169) was Patriarch of Constantinople between 1156 and 1169. During Luke's patriarchate several other major theological controversies occurred. In 1156–1157 the question was raised, whether Christ had offered himself as a sacrifice for the sins of the world to the Father and to the Holy Spirit only, or also to the Logos (i.e., to himself).[1] In the end a synod held at Constantinople in 1157 adopted a compromise formula, that the Word made flesh offered a double sacrifice to the Holy Trinity, despite the dissidence of Patriarch of Antioch-elect Soterichus Panteugenus.[2] During his term the theological issue of the relation between the Son and the Father in the Holy Trinity first appeared. The issue was created due to the explanation that one Demetrius of Lampi (in Phrygia) gave to the phrase of the Gospel of John «ὁ Πατήρ μου μείζων μου ἐστίν», which means my Father is bigger than me (John, XIV.29). Chrysoberges, at the behest of the Emperor Manuel I, convened several meetings of the synod in 1166 to solve the problem, which condemned as heretical the explanations of Demetrius and the laity that followed him.[3] Those who refused to submit to the synod's decisions had their property confiscated or were exiled.g[4] The political dimensions of this controversy are apparent from the fact that a leading dissenter from the Emperor's doctrine was his nephew Alexios Kontostephanos.[4] Other heresies continued to flourish in Byzantine possessions in Europe, including Bogomils, Paulicians, and Monophysites which Luke and his successors had difficulty in suppressing. Luke was also involved in a process of the Church trying to extract itself from too close an association with the secular life of the state. In 1115, the patriarch John IX Agapetos had sought to prevent clerics acting as advocates in lay courts. In December 1157, Chrysoberges extended this prohibition to all "worldly" occupations. In a still-extant canon, he wrote: "we have observed that some of those enrolled in the clergy have uncanonically involved themselves in worldly affairs. Some have taken on posts as curators or overseers of aristocratic houses and estates; others have undertaken the collection of public taxes... others have accepted dignities and magistracies assigned to the civil establishment.... we enjoin such people to desist from now on from all the aforesaid occupations, and to devote themselves to ecclesiastical exigencies...."[6] Such a separation of church and state was key to preserve the church from undue secular influence over matters it considered strictly clerical. This was especially key at the time as the rule of the Emperor Manuel I Comnenos was noted for its autocratic style and caesaropapism, and though idiosyncratic, generally made the patriarchate subservient directly to the needs of the state. Diameter: 32.75mm Weight: 26.65gr Condition: Very Fine Provenance: From a Private UK Collection. Starting price: 250 EUR
